Alaska's criminal laws define six types of felonies and two types of misdemeanors

- Murder, which includes only first-degree murder
 - Unclassified felonies, which include second-degree murder, attempted murder, selling heroin to a minor, and kidnapping
 - Unclassified felony sexual offenses, which include first-degree sexual assault (rape) and first-degree sexual abuse of a minor (sexual penetration with anyone under 13, or a son or daughter under 18)
 - Class A felonies, which include manslaughter, armed robbery, arson with risk of physical injury, selling heroin to an adult, and first-degree assault
 - Class B felonies, which include unarmed robbery, theft over $25,000, selling cocaine or marijuana to a minor, burglary in a dwelling, bribery, perjury, second-degree assault, and second-degree sexual abuse of a minor
 - Class C felonies, which include negligent homicide, burglary not in a dwelling, third-degree assault, theft of $500-$25,000, check forgery, possession of heroin or cocaine, selling marijuana, vehicle theft, repeat drunk driving, and bootlegging
 - Class A misdemeanors, which include fourth-degree assault, theft of $50-$500, drunk driving, refusing a breath test, resisting arrest, wanton waste of a moose, and trespass in a dwelling
 - Class B misdemeanors, which include carrying a concealed weapon, gambling, and possession of marijuana
